

Wall Street's Most Volatile Week Ever (Podcast)

March 20, 2020 — 7:41 PM EDT

"What'd You Miss This Week" goes through a financial market week for the history books.

Scott Miner, global chief investment officer at Guggenheim and Jeffrey Rosenberg, senior portfolio manager for systematic fixed income at Blackrock, joined together to talk about the economic fallout from coronavirus and what governments and central bankers should do to respond.

Diane Swonk, chief economist at Grant Thornton, came on alongside Nick Maroutsos, global head of bond at Janus Henderson, to offer their thoughts on potential policy prescriptions to offset the impact.

Then Yossi Sheffi, engineering systems professor and head of the transportation center at MIT, went through how to expand the U.S. health care system's capacity and how necessary activities like grocery shopping can be done more safely amid the outbreak.

Running time 55:20

{Podcast available via Link}

<https://www.bloomberg.com/news/audio/2020-03-20/wall-street-s-most-volatile-week-ever-podcast>